34th Annual WaterReuse Symposium

The Annual WaterReuse Symposium is the nation's premier conference on water recycling. The event attracts more than 600 water professionals from around the nation. The 33rd Annual WaterReuse Symposium in Austin was the most successful annual Symposium in nearly decade, attracting over 600 registrants. This year, it has the added benefit of including the research of the former WaterReuse Research Foundation, now the Water Research Foundation, in a newly combined event. Symposium sponsors will reach audiences of both the former WRF Research Conference and the Annual WaterReuse Symposium with only one sponsorship.

The 34th Annual WaterReuse Symposium is in San Diego, California September 8-11, 2019. This year's program, whose theme is "Collaborate to Innovate," will showcase how effective collaborations among the recycled water community are leading to innovative solutions. Sessions will examine successful strategies adopted by business, industry, technology providers and utilities that incorporate recycled water solutions. We'll look at ways community leaders prepare themselves to move toward a recycled water future; how technology providers are working with utility and industrial customers to ensure the right treatment systems are available; and how our utilities and industries are working with researchers to ensure decision-making is informed by sound science. We will hear from leaders in the agricultural, food and beverage, and energy fields on key collaborations they rely on within their sector to launch recycled water projects. And, we'll showcase successful financing strategies.
